Yes, they can

Tidewater Community College won the top prize – Juror’s Choice – for this year’s Canstruction, an engineering competition that raises awareness about hunger and brings in large food donations for the Foodbank of Southeastern Virginia. TCC also won for the most cans used, a new award. TCC’s Engineering Club used more than 11,286 cans – almost five tons – to build their entry, which reflected the theme, “Stop Hunger in its Tracks.”

Participating were, from left, Ryan McMullin, Nichole Foreman, David Harter, Paul Tobin (in back), Nicholas Henriksen, Paul Gordy, who is the TCC engineering program head, Robert Lotspeich, John Kurzer and Sean Moninger. Award winners were announced Nov. 19. After creations are judged and exhibited for two weeks, the food goes to the food bank.
